    chore: add integration tests

    this adds a few integration tests:

    * get-notes
    * set-editor-content, get-editor-content
    * get-config

    We need to test on the IPC level, because playwright cannot handle electron dialogs.

    Also adds npm-run-all dev dependency and uses a common approach to group tests into categories (and runs them all).

    Applies fixes to unit tests.

    Allows to run whole test suite with "make test" which will return with non-zero exit code, if any test failed.

    feat: make config file location platform independent

    This change allows us to use the "app" object in the configuration/customization module and to use platform specific path as documented here:

    https://www.electronjs.org/docs/latest/api/app#appgetpathname

    This required a couple of changes in main, preload as well, mostly to accomodate the "app" object passed into the various classes.

    The problem was that modules required by the initial module for electron do not have the "app" object created properly just yet. We have to move the initialization to a later stage.

    chore: try to avoid executeJavaScript

    Move to ipcRenderer plus callback style messaging from main process to renderer (e.g. setting the title of the window to the filename).

    This is the beginning of a longer set of changes that will add awareness of the current filename to the editor, so it can be better intergrated fix: sidebar search element was not visible

    Duplicate functions in editor, like "initializeElements", "initializeEventListeners" were leftover from the rebase/integration process. These should not mostly be removed.

    The constructor of the editor now only contains field initialization.
    Before the editor becomes usable, Editor.init() must be called, which then synchronously sets up elements and event listeners.

    feat: towards loading/saving note

    At some point, we need to use window.webContents.executeJavaScript to execute a function in the renderer process that has access to the textarea, e.g. to get or set its value applying KISS here: just work with the "textarea" (of which we have just one) directly - any other editor interaction (like updating the character count) is postponed for now

    feat: editor modularization

    the editor now allows to run code after the initial "welcome" typing sequence stops; for that, the editor now uses promises to wait for the init code to finish.

    Also, there is a dummy message ("window.api.hey") in preload that makes it into the HTML view console.

    feat: editor module

    - separates editor functionality into a module
    - basic event handling, preview

    It is also possible to set and get editor content through the editor object.

    The editor module comes with a help text, toggled with F1 or CTRL-h.

    feat: llm module

    Add an llm module that allows the editor to interact with a local LLM.
    We use ollama and currently there is no way to set an API key for a paid service, but that could be added later, since the "openai" "generate" api is already implemented.

    There are two environment variables that control where Ollama is found and which model to use:

        $ OLLAMA_HOST=localhost:11434 NOTER_OLLAMA_MODEL=gemma npm start

    The OLLAMA_HOST variable is the default variable that Ollama uses itself. It may already be set on the users computer. The NOTER_OLLAMA_MODEL is a custom variable for our application. These settings can move into a settings configuration file later.

Some noteable changes:

    * editor.js: factored out editor "state" into: EditState, PreviewState, HelpState and GenerateState; the editor will scroll along, when responses are generated
    * llm.js: module to handle LLM interaction, that is send a prompt and receive a response
    * main.css: minor CSS tweaks
    * the statusbar track total characters written by a "H"uman and
      "M"achine
    * the statusbar indicates whether a model is available or not
    * llm.js will fallback to a random available model, if the request model cannot be found

    Includes basic tests using the jest test framework.

    feat: integrate editor customizations

    This allows to override editor options from a config.json, which gets created in the current directory if none exists.

Author: Martin Czygan <martin.czygan@gmail.com> Date: Mon Jan 20 14:07:38 2025 +0100

    feat: editor modularization

    the editor now allows to run code after the initial "welcome" typing sequence stops; for that, the editor now uses promises to wait for the
    init code to finish.

    Also, there is a dummy message ("window.api.hey") in preload that makes it into the HTML view console.

    - separates editor functionality into a module
    - basic event handling, preview

    It is also possible to set and get editor content through the editor
    object.

    The editor module comes with a help text, toggled with F1 or CTRL-h.
